

Contents

Introduction	1
--------------	---

PART ONE: PAINTINGS

1. The Paradox of Painting	7
1.1 A Famous Portrait	7
1.2 The Paradox	8
1.3 Gombrich and Gombricheans	10
1.4 Wollheim	12
1.5 Walton and Imagination Theories	16
1.6 Surface-Resemblance Theories	19
1.7 The Non-Distraction Thesis	21
1.8 An Initial Argument for the Non-Distraction Thesis	23
1.9 The Myth of Las Meniñas	32
1.10 Detachment and Abstraction	36
1.11 Distraction and Division	39
1.12 The Problem Summarized	50
2. Painted Things	52
2.1 The Paradox and Its Solution	52
2.2 Not Exaggerating the Ontological Issue	54
2.3 Not Minimizing the Classificatory Issue	56
2.4 What Kind of Thing Is a Painted Face?	60
2.5 How Can a Painted Face Be a Face? A Simple Proposal	67
2.6 A Final Choice	74

PART TWO: PHOTOGRAPHS

3. Photography and the Real World	79
3.1 Extending the Theory	79
3.2 Basic Photographs and the Processes of Photography	81
3.3 Chains of Sufficient Causes	89
3.4 Dependence, Factivity, and Transparency	93
4. Transparency and Distraction in Photographs	102
4.1 Photographs and the Non-Distraction Thesis	102
4.2 Preliminary Considerations	103
4.3 Composition and Non-Distraction	106

4.4 Two Comparisons from Scruton	116
4.5 'Ça a été'	123
4.6 Real Photographic Likenesses	129
4.7 Methodological Coda	136

PART THREE: NOVELS

5. Paradox and Distraction in Novels	143
5.1 The Paradox of Fiction	143
5.2 Three Kinds of Theory	145
5.3 The Paradox of Fiction Reconsidered	150
5.4 The Three Kinds of Theory and the Traditional Paradox of Fiction	155
5.5 Distraction and the Three Kinds of Theory	159
5.6 The Non-Distraction Thesis in Novels: A Case Study	163
5.7 Non-Distraction and the Philosophy of Language	165
5.8 Methodological Coda	171
6. Real Characters	174
6.1 The Prima Facie Case for Real Likenesses in Novels	174
6.2 The Orthodoxy in the Philosophy of Language	176
6.3 Non-Transactional Language	179
6.4 Playing a Part	182
6.5 Narrators in Novels	190
6.6 Verbal Mimes	195
6.7 Proper Names	204
6.8 How Things Stand	214
Postscript	217
References	221
Index	227