

Contents

Foreword vii
Steve Case

Acknowledgments xi

1

The Pivot to a New Government Operating System	I
Distributed, Innovative, and Open	5
The Pros and Cons of Municipal Bureaucracy	9
Today's Best Practices Are Necessary but Not Sufficient	14
Building Blocks of the New O/S	18
Why Now?	23

2

The State of Innovation:
What We Have and What We're Missing	29
Assessing the Current Innovation Landscape	31
Thoughts and Theories Toward a New O/S	40

3
UX: Placing Citizens and Those Who Serve Them at the Center	49
When Government Uses UX	51
Citizen-Focused UX	57
UX for Public Employees	67
A Never-Ending Effort	70
4
Government That Acts in Time	75
Operating in Time	78
Regulating in Time	83
Regulation in a Distributed World	94
City as Referee in the Information Game	102
5
The Problem-Solving Public Servant	109
Allegheny County's Empowered Caseworkers	111
Key Components of a Data-Infused System	114
Public Servants in the Data-Infused System	125
Managing More Autonomous Employees	135
New O/S for Human Resources	138
6
Mashed Up Government	151
Data Configured for Kansas City's Citizens	154
The Importance of Resident Intelligence	155
Government by Proxy: Connecting the Contractors	163
Greater Capacity with Institutional Partners	167
7
A New City from a New O/S	177
Appendix
Implementation Guide: Strategies to Address the Ten Most Important Challenges to a New O/S	189
Index	199

For more information, please visit www.anewcityos.org.